

South Africa, 2012: the white rightwing of the “new” RSA regime \(Part I\)

Article of January 7, 2013

Some Afrikaans-speaking whites, belonging to the so-called “Boer-Afrikaner rightwing” (rightwing that confuses the white non-Boer Afrikaners with the Boers ), were arrested Saturday, December 15, 2012, by the Imperial Police of the RSA (Republic of South Africa). Initially, the media reported that arrested were seven [1], but then only four [2]. Mark Trollip (48 years old) was arrested in the northern Cape, on the road between Kimberly and Douglas; Martin Keevy (47) at a guest house in Bloemfontein; Johan Prinsloo (49) in Springs; and Hein Boonzaaier (51) in Centurion [3].

Mark Trollip runs an organization which he is self-proclaimed leader, the “Wit Brandwag” [4]. Johan Prinsloo, an agent (in service in the Vehicle Theft Unit [5]) or a former agent (owner, actually, of a funeral home in Springs [6]) of the imperial regime of the “new” RSA, is the leader of the Boere Beskermings Forum (BBF - Forum for Protection of Farmers) and the Operational Manager of the Federale Vryheidsparty (FVP) [7].

Hein Boonzaaier, chairman of the Afrikaner Interne Tegnieuse Ontwikkelingsgroep (AITOG), is the managing director of the Hausenberg Ontwikkelings Koöperasie Beperk [8], a cooperative whose goal is to build in the Prieska district [9], in the Cape (former British colony), a small Afrikaner town, like Orania . Hein Boonzaaier is also the leader of the FVP [7].

Prieska, as Orania, was among the towns mentioned in the early 90s by Carel Boshoff in the project of “

”, independent non-Boer Afrikaner state in a large area of the Cape Province, and was included (still together with Orania) in the project for a non-Boer Afrikaner “volkstaat” in an area \(much smaller than “Orandeë”\) of the north-west of the Cape Province, between the Vaal River and the Atlantic Ocean

, a non-Boer Afrikaner “project” promoted in the mid-'90s by

Vryheidsfront \(VF\)

, which Carel Boshoff was a member.

At Prieska, from December 9 to 21, Johan Prinsloo organized a gathering aimed to commemorate the Day of the Vow . That for to commemorate a Boer Vow the Boer volk be called to gather together in a territory foreign to the Boer

Republics

, is a clear attack to the Boer identity, that shows the white Afrikaner (and not Boer) nature of the initiative. That event had to attract, in addition to the BBF, all leaders of the

Volksorganisasie Leiersberaad \(VOLBER\)

, as well as those of the

Afrikaner Electoral Commission \(VVK\)

[10] and of the FVP. The organizers hoped to reach 300,000 participants [11] but in the end attracted just more than 100 people [9].

Jaco Scherman , owner of the Panzer Protection and of the Leeuwag (organizations related to BBF), with a long career in the imperial police of the “new” RSA, which is still a reservist [12], interviewed by Rapport [13], admitted links with Johan Prinsloo and Hein Boonzaaier.

The links between Jaco Scherman and Johan Prinsloo (leader of the BBF) were, obviously, already of public knowledge and known to the whole so-called “Boer-Afrikaner rightwing” environment, because both men are active in the BBF. Against the BBF, and in particular against some of its members, including the same Jaco Scherman, were launched various charges, in particular with reference to the case of Cornelia de Wet .

Johan Prinsloo and Hein Boonzaaier were suspended from the FVP immediately after their arrest [3].

Initially, some media had reported that the four men (Johan Prinsloo, Hein Boonzaaier, Mark Trollip and Martin Keevy) were arrested after that Imperial Police was informed that they could pose a threat to the 53rd National Elective Conference of the African National Congress \(ANC\) , underway in Mangaung from December 16 to 20, 2012 [1]; then, instead, that the arrested were “not linked to the conference at all” [2].

But on 17 December the imperial state, at the courthouse of Bloemfontein, has accused the four men of planning acts of terrorism and treason [9]. In particular, to have planned to hit with mortar fire the conference of the ANC, the party that rules the RSA Empire, and to kill President Jacob Zuma and other prominent men of the regime [14]. Their case was postponed to January 8, 2013; and in the meantime they would remain in prison [4].

The story seems to use a (very far from reality) plot already used and known, and by Volkstaat.org explicitly narrated, in the article “South Africa, 2012: the white rightwing of the “new” RSA regime”, published on December 10, 2012 (therefore several days before the arrests).

Here below some parts of it:

The VBWB, under the leadership of John Els, seems to have discussed a number of armed attacks against the imperial regime, in particular: to hit with mortar fire the stadium of Bloemfontein during the celebrations for the centenary of the African National Congress (ANC), scheduled for January 2012 [15].

Some people believe that these discussions (so distant and disconnected from contingent political reality to appear grotesque) were promoted by regime's agents provocateurs, in order to receive additional funds to finance their repressive activities [16]. Of course, these discussions (even if they do not become action), once revealed to the public opinion, promote an anti-white sentiment, consolidating the imperial regime, and encourage the persecution of the Boers, who regularly end up in jail.

It is also clear that any isolated armed action, then outside the context of a popular struggle for national liberation, don't serve the Cause of the Boers, but only favor the anti-Boer repression.

[...] According to some, however, the Leeuwag began to present itself as something different, as the military wing of the BFF, which resumed some discourses of the VBWB.

Die Burger [17], explicitly cites the hypothetical plan aimed to attack with mortar fire the stadium of Bloemfontein during the celebrations for the centenary of the ANC, scheduled for January 2012. According to a source of Die Burger: they didn't have mortars so postpone their plan to the conference of December 2012 [17].

The investigation that led to the arrests of December 15 is the result of joint work of the police, security forces and military intelligence [17] of the regime, which have infiltrated [17] groups of the so-called “Boer-Afrikaner rightwing”.

Die Burger [17] had access to a report that an agent had sent to their bosses. It states that «bombs were made» and that the men of the so-called “Boer-Afrikaner rightwing” are on the brink of gaining access to 120mm mortars and 155mm ammunition that were supposed to be used in G5-Cannons [17].
